

The Student Right-to-Know Act is a law passed by Congress in 1990 that requires institutions eligible for Title IV funding under the Higher Education Act of 1965 to disclose the completion or graduation rate of certificate- or degree-seeking, full-time students entering those institutions. The law requires colleges and universities that administer federal Title IV funds to disclose certain information to prospective and enrolled students, parents and employees. The law requires institutions to collect, report, and disclose graduation rates for full-time, first-time, degree-seeking undergraduate students.
